

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

A deepening depression will pass northern Scotland on Wednesday, accompanied by strong and gusty winds. It will also start to pull in much colder air, which will lead to the showers turning to snow, sleet and hail in many areas later in the day. Lightning may accompany the heavier showers, with potential disruption to power supplies.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind and Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Wed, 11th Jan 2017 until 23:55 on Wed, 11th Jan 2017

Very windy weather with gusts to 70 mph or more may affect the far northwest and north of Scotland overnight. After a brief lull winds will increase during Wednesday afternoon and evening, accompanied by increasingly wintry showers. By evening several cm of snow will begin to accumulate away from western coasts, especially over higher ground. In combination with gale force winds, gusting up to 65 mph near showers, travel conditions will start to turn very tricky, resulting in longer travel travel times.
